

NO MORE OVER SIZED TEES FOR MUMMIES-TO-BE!

Frustrated by the lack of fashionable and affordable maternity wear Brisbane mum-to-be Rebecca Draper has taken the reins and vowed to exhibit the chic panache pregnant women deserve by announcing the creation of her new label Lumpee Bumpee. In only a matter of days the website has received a huge response from pregnant women across Australia. See www.lumpeebumpee.com.au.

Lumpee Bumpee offers a range of amusing and vivacious tees, designed to accentuate a woman's pregnant belly, rather than hide it. Its range of tees features clever slogans that are entertaining and endearing at the same time. The line was designed to provide great looks and absolute comfort, according to Draper.

"Our tees are "one size fits most," or in this case 'One size fits most bumps.' Usually women grow out of their maternity wear a couple of times during their pregnancy, which means having to purchase more as their bump grows. Our tees are made from materials that stretch a great deal, allowing a woman to wear our funky tees throughout their pregnancy," announced Draper.

The most noticeable difference between Lumpee Bumpee and other maternity clothes is the undeniable versatility of each piece and most importantly for women preparing to go on maternity leave - the price (AUS$29.00). "Our mothers had more time to run up affordable clothing for themselves but these days, most women are working harder then ever to get their finances in order so they can survive the months without pay," says Draper.

Lumpee Bumpee is on its way to being a one-stop-shop for chic and trendy mummies-to-be with new additions of Daddy Tees planned for the website early 2007.
